Claim 1:

Generating a software tool to create computer files that define integrated circuits providing a plurality of first computer-readable directories arranged in a first directory structure based on a first version on an ASIC design system different from the second version.

Claim 8:

Generating a software tool to create computer files that define integrated circuits mapping directory references between a first directory structure and a second directory structure by source name; and inputting the first computer file to the computer, wherein the first directory structure is based on a first version on an ASIC design system, which is different from the second version.

Claim 15:

A computer useable medium having a software tool for controlling a to create computer files that defines an integrated circuit in the first directory structure containing first computer-readable directories based on a first version on an ASIC design system; and creating a second computer-readable file, which defines the integrated circuit in a second computer-readable directory of a second directory structure based on a second version of an ASIC design system different from the first.

Reason for Allowance

The prior art discloses providing a first and a second directory for comparison and generating a map file referencing differences to generate software tools as disclosed by Draper U.S. Patent 6,604,236. However, the prior art does not disclose providing a first directory arranged in a structure based on a first version of an ASIC design system different from a second version of an ASIC design system.

Thus, all remaining claims 2 – 7; 9 – 14; and 16 – 20 are also allowed.
